

AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

March 2, 2011

Secretary Arne Duncan
U.S. Department of Education
LBJ Education Building, Room 7W311
400 Maryland Avenue, SW
Washington, DC 20202

Dear Secretary Duncan:

On behalf of the 60 higher education associations and accrediting organizations listed below, I write to express our serious concerns regarding the state authorization regulations in Section 600.9 of the Oct. 29, 2010, final program integrity rule. These final regulations significantly expand and complicate the existing federal requirements for institutions to be “legally authorized” in a state. While the final rule reflects changes from the draft proposal, these changes do not address the concerns we raised during the rulemaking process. In addition, the final rule includes an entirely new and problematic provision regulating distance education programs.

We request the department’s immediate assistance in addressing our concerns.

I. General state authorization requirements and potential for state overreach

Since its inception, the Higher Education Act has required that an institution of higher education be legally authorized within a state to provide postsecondary education. States have approached this authorization function in a variety of ways—particularly with respect to non-public institutions. Unfortunately, the new regulations will significantly complicate and confuse these prior efforts. We have grave concerns about this federal effort to define these relationships and do not believe it is either wise or appropriate for the federal government to pursue this course of action. Although the preamble to the new regulations includes an illustrative list of arrangements the department would consider to be either in or out of compliance, this list is inadequate to dispel confusion about what is expected of an individual institution. In addition, there is no accurate compilation of existing state requirements that might be used to gauge whether or not the policies of any given state pass muster.

The ambiguity of the regulations also raises the concern that state officials may overreach by imposing requirements on private, non-profit institutions that go well beyond the grant of authority to operate as postsecondary institutions and that have nothing to do with the program integrity objectives of the new regulations. These institutions vary widely in terms of the missions they serve, but what they share is a commitment to fulfilling those missions. Although the final regulations reflect some acknowledgement of mission-based issues in provisions relating to religious mission, they are too narrowly drawn to alleviate these broad concerns, particularly in light of the fact that they could result in state actions that would exceed the scope of the Department's intentions and interfere with religious mission.

II. Distance education requirements

Section 600.9(c) of the new state authorization regulation requires institutions offering distance education programs to: (1) meet any state requirements necessary to be legally offering postsecondary distance education in that state, and (2) upon request, document to the secretary the state's approval. This rule essentially places the federal government in the role of enforcing state statutes—a role inappropriate for it to assume. We support the right and responsibility of states to regulate the quality and nature of the education being delivered within their respective borders. In cases where a state notifies an institution that it is not in compliance with state regulations, the institution must take appropriate steps to bring itself into compliance. Distance education providers have a responsibility to fully comply with state law, even though this can be challenging. States can and do enforce their own distance education laws, and the prior absence of a federal regulation on this topic has in no way hindered their efforts.

Even more troubling is the fact that there is no way to guarantee that an institution has met the department's interpretation of any state's regulations, and no way for an institution to ensure it would satisfy these federal interpretations if audited. Furthermore, if an institution is unable to obtain the federally required documentation by July 1, it will be forced to discontinue enrolling students from that state, even though it has fully complied with all state distance education requirements. Failure to do so could threaten Title IV eligibility for the entire institution.

Because of these uncertainties, this new rule could force campuses to pull back on legitimate and creative distance education programs, leaving the students most in need behind. These programs are often most needed in rural states that have small and dispersed populations and where distance education opportunities are arguably most vital. In addition, these changes could have a particularly negative impact on members of the military and their families, who frequently relocate to new states, as well as other citizens who are attempting to develop new skills to successfully compete and participate in the emerging economic recovery.

Further, the final distance education regulation could seriously hamper efforts to meet the president's 2020 goal—a goal the academic community wholeheartedly supports and endorses. This concern is not theoretical. One leading public flagship university initially decided to stop enrolling students from other states after the rule was first published. Only after careful reconsideration has it reversed its original decision. If other institutions were to follow the initial path this university chose, it would come at the expense of students and our shared goal.

REQUESTED ACTION:

We believe the best course of action would be to rescind the new state authorization regulation in its entirety. This is a conclusion we have not reached lightly and only after determining that our concerns cannot be addressed through modification. As finalized, the regulation creates serious concerns for our private, non-profit institutions—in particular for religiously-affiliated and other mission-based institutions—and threatens the ability of both public and private institutions to serve students through effective distance education programs.

For these reasons, we ask you to rescind Section 600.9.<sup>1</sup> We thank you for your consideration of our request.

Sincerely,

Molly Corbett Broad
President
